Longtime Carmel-by-the-Sea employee called to active duty

By TAMARA GRIPPI

PRESIDENT BUSH'S order to activate more than 10,000 reservists has touched Carmel. Longtime city employee John Hanson, a reservist in the U.S. Army National Guard, was called to active duty this week.

Hanson, 41, an Abrams M1A2 tank commander, serves with the 149th battalion unit and is currently stationed at Camp Roberts.

"He went down for his drill and they kept him," explained his wife, Annette. "He doesn't know how long he'll be there — two days, two weeks or two years."

Hanson, who takes care of the maintenance, improvements and construction of city buildings, has worked for the city since 1988.

His supervisor, Tim Meroney, said the city will sorely miss Hanson, one of only two full-time maintenance specialists. "When we lose half our department, it puts the kibosh on us," Meroney said.

Carmel mom creates new way to reach her son aboard ship

By MARY BROWNFIELD

Joshua Quayle

"AMERICA LOVES you — Thank you for your courage."

"Thanks for being so brave for us."

"Thank you for protecting us! God bless."

"Thanks for the courage that we all wish we could express."

These are just a few of the hundreds of sentiments penned in red and blue ink on a vast white sheet also emblazoned with the name of a U.S. Navy cruiser, the USS Princeton, on which Debra Quayle's son serves.

Quayle — known to many Carmelites as that vivacious blonde behind the counter at Bruno's Market — is used to her 22-year-old son, Joshua Quayle, being at sea. He's

Charities fret as $$$ head east

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WITH MILLIONS of dollars being sent back east for the recovery efforts in New York City and Washington, D.C., local charities are hoping they won't be forgotten.

The boards of directors of several prominent Monterey County organizations have met within the last few days to talk about their financial situation.

Leaders of some local groups say they're seeing an increased need for the services they provide and are worried about having the financial support to meet the demand.

"All the agencies on whose boards I sit are crunching numbers and anticipating an even greater need on the Monterey Peninsula," said Morley Brown.

Brown said the Salvation Army's Good Samaritan Center has recently seen a 22 percent increase in the hot meals it gives out and a 28 percent increase in the homeless people asking to use the center's showers.

Freeway group will sue to stop climbing lane

■ State parks getting ready to acquire Hatton Canyon

By PAUL MILLER

THE ATTORNEY representing a group that wants a freeway built through Hatton Canyon said this week she will file a lawsuit against Monterey County challenging the county's approval of a climbing lane for Highway 1 through Carmel.

"I'll be representing the Citizens for Hatton Canyon and a group of individual residents of the Carmel area," said Christine Gianascol. "We'll be filing by Oct. 8, to meet the deadlines under CEQA."

Her comments came as an official with the California Department of Parks and Recreation said the parks department would acquire Hatton Canyon by the end of the year, as required by a bill passed by the California legislature last summer.

Gordon McDaniel said the transfer agreement with Caltrans was nearly finished, but funding for operation of the park has not been finalized.

Gianascol said despite the impending sale of Hatton Canyon, her lawsuit would challenge the climbing lane, which is intended to relieve the daily traffic jam-ups on Highway 1 and Carmel Valley Road. She maintains the climbing lane will have significant environmental effects that were not properly analyzed by the county under the California Environmental Quality Act.

"We also may allege noncompliance with the Coastal Act and other laws," she said. But principally her group says the climbing lane would damage scenic resources, eliminate important trees and impact other biologic resources, and will damage wetlands and riparian vegetation alongside Highway 1.

Gianascol's clients have also filed an appeal of the climbing lane approval with the California Coastal Commission, which has jurisdiction because Highway 1 is in the coastal zone. The appeal is also based on the same defects that will be alleged in the lawsuit, Gianascol said. The commission will consider the appeal Oct. 10 in San Diego.

Rescue from flaming car nets deputies Medal of Valor

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WOULD YOU risk your life to save a man from a burning automobile? Three sheriff's deputies who did just that have been awarded Medals of Valor by the Monterey County Peace Officers Association for pulling a man — who turned out to be a car thief — out of a crushed Mercedes as it sat burning on Highway 1 last summer.

The Medal of Valor is rarely awarded, according to MCPOA president Lynn Lincoln, and is bestowed upon officers who — above and beyond the call of duty — place their lives in peril in order to save someone else.

Colleagues at the sheriff's department recommended Sgt. Scott Ragan and deputies Frank Duenas and Oscar Leon for the award because of their actions July 13.

Alerted to the wreck by a 911 call, they arrived to find the car, a 2001 Mercedes convertible, smashed into a tree and fully engulfed in flames with the driver trapped inside. Duenas and Leon fought the fire with extinguishers while Ragan tried to pull the man — 24-year-old San Francisco resident Matthew Ryan Boyajian — from the car, according to sheriff's deputy Bill Cassara. CHP officers later discovered the driver had stolen the Mercedes in Carmel.

"Ragan made several attempts, each time having to back off due to the heat," Cassara said. "But on his last attempt, he was able to get his arms around the upper torso of the victim and pull him through the window to safety."

At one point the fire flashed, inflicting first- and second-degree burns on Ragan's face and hands.

"They all went to do what they could to help each other — they worked as a team to get their mission accomplished. Sgt. Ragan is 6 foot 8, so I don't think the other deputies would have had the leverage he eventually had to use to free the victim," Cassara said. "It's not just saving a life, but

Carmel officer shot man in self-defense, D.A. decides

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE CONCLUSION announced this week by the Monterey County District Attorney's Office — that Carmel Police Officer Phil Nash was justified in shooting Adrian Castro in self-defense — came as no surprise to CPD Detective Sgt. Terry Chandler.

"It's unfortunate that someone has to go through something like that, and I'm sure if he had his druthers he wouldn't either, but sometimes your hands are forced," Chandler said.

Castro died of his wounds two weeks after the April 19 shooting. According to Chandler, Castro "picked on the wrong guy," when pointed a gun at Nash after a car accident on a Salinas street.

"Nash is a firearms instructor — he knows what he's doing. I personally think he did the right thing," Chandler said.

Following a five-month investigation, assistant district attorney Berkley Brannon concluded Nash should not be charged with a crime for shooting Castro because he met the legal standard for using deadly force: that a person "reasonably believes that there is imminent danger that another person will kill or cause great bodily injury, and reasonably believes that it is necessary under the circumstances to use deadly force to avoid such harm."

The shooting occurred when Nash, off duty and dining with friends, "heard the sound of squealing tires and a racing engine, followed by a loud crash," according to Brannon.

Nash and his friends ran out to see Castro climbing out the driver's side window of the Toyota pickup he had smashed into a parked Datsun. Castro then ran down the street toward them, ignoring cries from onlookers to stop. Nash then began moving up the street toward Castro.

"When Mr. Castro saw officer Nash moving toward him, Castro pulled a Glock 9mm semi-automatic pistol from his waistband," the report said. "In response, Officer Nash drew his own off-duty firearm."

Separated by a distance of 10 feet, Castro pointed the Glock at Nash's head and the officer reacted by shooting him once in the side, Brannon wrote.

On the way to the hospital, Castro told a witness he believed the officer shot him because he thought Castro was going to fire, the D.A. said.

A blood alcohol sample taken at the scene showed Castro was intoxicated at the time of the shooting. He died two weeks later at Salinas Valley Memorial from major organ failure as a result of the gunshot wound.

"Based on the totality of the circumstances, including the decedent's flight from the scene of a crime and refusal to stop, the decedent's act of drawing and pointing a firearm at Officer Nash, and the rapidity with which these events occurred, the district attorney's office has concluded that Officer Nash acted justifiably under the circumstances," the D.A. wrote. "For these reasons, no criminal action against Officer Nash is warranted or contemplated."

Nash, a 10-year veteran, is CPD firing range master and oversees the firearms training of all sworn officers.

His own training is monitored by another officer, and he regularly attends courses offered by the FBI and other law enforcement organizations for firearms instructors. Chandler said he believes Nash's training — and therefore his quick response during the incident — may have saved his life.

Although it did not conduct a criminal investigation since the shooting occurred within Salinas P.D.'s jurisdiction, Carmel P.D. reviewed the shooting to make sure Nash had followed the city's rules, Chandler said.

"We did that immediately after Salinas finished its investigation — we did ours and asked the D.A.'s office to take a look at it, too," he said. "He followed all our guidelines and procedures."

Chandler said CPD asked the district attorney to look at the case so an unbiased third party could make its own conclusion based on the facts.

"We don't want anybody to say, 'Carmel looked at it and of course they found it justified,'" he said. "We take an independent party and let them investigate — it gives it more reliability when an independent agency comes up with the same result."

Commissioners take first look at laws behind Carmel's coastal plan

By MARY BROWNFIELD

THE CARMEL Planning Commission had its first go at the city's mammoth Coastal Implementation Plan — the city codes that will be used to enforce the Coastal Land Use Plan — during a Sept. 27 study session.

The draft of the 400-page implementation plan includes many existing city ordinances, from general regulations applying to all districts in the city to specific design guidelines on business signs and rules for off-street parking, all of which would be used in projects governed by the city's coastal Land Use Plan.

There are also many new provisions, including:

- new zoning districts;
- new-standards for residential land uses and new design rules for homes;
- special rules for the beach and environmentally sensitive areas ;
- specific plans for Del Mar and Carmel Plaza; and
- standards for coastal development permits.

The document doesn't contain the new historic preservation ordinances — they were purposely left out of the draft, principal planner Brian Roseth told commissioners, because that element is undergoing environmental review and not yet ready to be included in the implementation plan.

EMC Planning Group president Michael Groves, hired by the city to draft the Carmel Local Coastal Program, told commissioners that completing the implementation plan and handing it over to California Coastal Commission staff for their perusal will likely smooth the long LCP approval process that lies ahead.

"In order for coastal staff to see if the city's general policies will work, they want to see what happens with the ordinances. It's great to protect the beach or environmental-

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

Stretching is recommended before beginning any physical activity. Scientists have gained new insight into stretching in a recent study reported in The Physician and Sports medicine. For most people, a 15-30 second stretch will suffice for most muscle groups. Stretching does not decrease the rate of injury, but extends the range of motion, reducing stiffness. Doctors caution patients to avoid the "bounce"—repeated brief muscle stretches, which increase stiffness and can actually be harmful.

When Dr. Gerald W. Deas got into medicine back in the 1960's he wanted to practice medicine the old-fashioned way. He divided his residency between general medicine and various specialties. But Dr. Deas may best be remembered for his seven-year crusade to get Black women to stop the unusual habit of eating laundry starch, a practice believed to be a holdover from Africa where the women ate clay. The starch caused anemia because it interfered with the body's ability to produce iron. Dr. Deas made it his mission to educate these women and lobby for warning labels on the boxes of Argo starch.

Pot plants found at Point Lobos

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

STATE PARK rangers at Point Lobos discovered 20 pot plants growing in a densely wooded area of the reserve and called in the County of Monterey Marijuana Eradication Team to kill the weed Sept. 17, according to the Monterey County Sheriff's Department.

"It was in a pretty dense area, but somehow they noticed it and called us so we could eradicate it," said sheriff's deputy Bill Cassara.

September means harvest time and therefore quick action, according to Cassara, because law enforcement officers don't want the growers or other would-be harvesters to pick the plants before they can be destroyed.

"As soon as they discover it, we have an obligation to pull it before someone else does," he said.

The 20 plants were supplied with water taken from the park's system and stored in a garbage can rigged with a drip irrigation system, according to Cassara. Tools and supplies associated with growing marijuana were also confiscated at the scene.

Estimated street value of the plants at maturity was $100,000, Cassara said.

Fine scenery + fine dining = the Fine Arts 5K

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WHERE ELSE do exercise and good Samaritanism involve taking a leisurely stroll or jog along some of the most beautiful coastline in the world and then sitting down to a beach-side champagne brunch accompanied by a jazz trio?

Only in Carmel, where the seventh annual Fine Arts 5K will be held Oct. 7 at 9 a.m. An entry of $25 ($15 for children, or $60 for a family of four) includes the walk/run, a long-sleeved T-shirt — adorned with a painting by local artist Joe Nordmann — and brunch on the beach. Proceeds go to the Family Service Agency of Monterey County.

"I just think it's a beautiful race — it's a very scenic course along the ocean," said race director Bob Hewitt. The route takes participants down Scenic Road, around Carmel Point, past Carmel River State Beach and back to Scenic at Valley View. It finishes on Scenic between Ocean and Eighth avenues.

"We'll have nice, pleasant running weather," he said, optimistically, "and a sumptuous champagne brunch afterwards."

And oh, the food

The brunch, catered by Salinas restaurant Hullaballoo, will include white table cloths and champagne. And tickets for breakfast alone — without the pre-meal workout — can be purchased for $10 apiece, Hewitt said.

The Fine Arts 5K is the primary fundraiser for the FSA, which seeks to solve issues of abuse, violence, neglect and stress by offering counseling, education and family support services to children and parents.

The walk/run is open to anyone aged 6 or older, but no wheels or pets are allowed, according to Hewitt. For more information, call 656-1234. Race registration begins at 7 a.m. at Ocean Avenue and Carmel Beach. Race starts at Scenic and Eighth at 9 a.m. Brunch starts at 9:30 a.m.

City grants $100,000 workers comp claim for former police chief

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL City Council has okayed a $100,000 worker's compensation settlement for former police chief Don Fuselier, who retired on disability earlier this year.

The council met in closed session Sept. 10, voting unanimously to approve the settlement and to pay for any future treatment of Fuselier's heart disease.

Fuselier went on medical leave approximately a year ago when doctors discovered 80 to 90 percent blockage in one of his coronary arteries. At that time, cardiologists performed an angioplasty and placed a stent in an artery.

While both the City of Carmel and Fuselier hoped the chief would be able to return to his job, his doctors ultimately recommended that he retire from police work. His 30-year career with the Carmel Police Department officially ended May 1.

"He had a lot of years of service with the police department," said Carmel City Administrator Rich Guillen. "He's a great guy. We wanted to make sure we gave him fair treatment."

Guillen said Fuselier met all the requirements for the disability retirement with the California Public Employees' Retirement System (CalPERS).

80 percent salary

Fuselier's CalPERS disability retirement will likely amount to 80 percent of the chief's former salary of $108,000 a year, according to city staff.

During Fuselier's absence, the city hired former Monterey Police Chief Floyd Sanderson to fill in on a temporary basis. Sanderson, who came out of retirement to take on the job, has already served six months and returned to his home in Grass Valley.

The city, which hired a search firm several months ago to conduct a nationwide recruitment for a new chief, is close to naming its choice.

Guillen said the city is currently running background checks on its top candidate — who beat out 75 other applicants for final consideration.

Once the city is satisfied with the results of the candidate's polygraph, physical exams, record searches and psychological exams, Guillen will be ready to announce his decision.

Commission tries to make sense of convoluted tree removal controversy

By TAMARA GRIPPI

MONTEREY COUNTY planning commissioners were confused and somewhat suspicious of a request to renew a seven-year-old use permit to cut down 141 coast live oaks and 74 Monterey Pines on land owned by Investmark, Inc., in Del Monte Forest.

After attempting to wade through a complicated history of old permits, stalled plans, well approvals and a lawsuit and after listening to accusations of illicit tree cutting, the commissioners finally decided to continue the hearing for at least another month.

At their Sept. 26 meeting, the commissioners seemed most confused by why their predecessors had granted the permit to remove trees on nine lots of record on Congress Road before plans for those nine houses had been approved.

Todd Bessire, representing the land owner, told the commission that it was originally the county's idea to handle the permits for all nine lots at once.

Bessire said his client, who had nine active building permits, was forced by the water moratorium to put his plans aside. Now, after drilling two wells, Investmark is ready to go ahead with its plans to develop two lots, he explained.

But the commissioners didn't see why they should approve tree removal on the remaining seven lots before water is available for them.

"It's a concept of giving a hunter a license for any species with any weapon at any time," said commissioner John Brennan.

Commissioner Robert Hernandez suggested that the commission take more of a piecemeal approach.

Some commissioners were disturbed to hear accusations of illicit tree cutting taking place on the property since the last permit extension expired. Dena Ibrahim showed the commission pictures of recently chopped trees on the site.

Commissioner Sharon Parsons called the pictures "bloody."

However, it's not a crime to cut down Monterey Pines without a permit on these particular lots, Bessire said. In the unincorporated areas of the county, a property owner does

A cool shower on a hot day. Nothing could be more refreshing. And it saves water, too.

Taking a short shower instead of a bath can save twenty gallons of water. A household of two can save as much as 1,200 gallons of water per month. It brings new meaning to feeling good about saving water!

Showers are just one way you can save water and save money. Here are a few additional ways you can help preserve Monterey Peninsula's water resources:

- Pick up a free low flow shower head and hose nozzle, courtesy of Cal-Am.
- Apply for a $100 rebate from Cal-Am when you install an ultra-low flush toilet.
- Apply for a $150 rebate from Cal-Am when you buy a washing machine with an EnergyStar label (you may also be eligible for additional rebates from PG&E.)
- Call Cal-Am for a free guide to water-saving irrigation tips for your home or business.
- Run washing machines and dishwashers only when full – and only during off-peak hours to save on your electricity bill as well.

Carmel Valley

Baptist Hope Youth Center will serve all, pastor says

By MARY BROWNFIELD

WHEN FIRST Baptist Church of Carmel Valley's senior pastor, Andy Strachan, moved here 18 years ago, he envisioned a church campus that people would visit more often than just on Sunday mornings.

That dream finally came to fruition this month when hundreds gathered to celebrate the opening of the 13,000-square-foot Hope Youth Center — a building that, despite its name, will attract all sorts of people to gather for all kinds of activities, he said.

"In the South, they call them 'family life centers' because they are after all generations," Strachan said.

The $1.3 million, two-story structure — designed by architect Paul Davis — includes meeting rooms, a game room, a small kitchen and a gym. Outside, a cobblestone street currently under construction will have lampposts, benches and a fire pit, and will lead to a small outdoor amphitheater and a prayer garden.

Local architect Paul Davis designed the Hope Youth Center at the First Baptist Church of Carmel Valley to look like a barn, in keeping with the Valley's character. The center's grand opening was Sept. 16.

"What we tried to do was design a building that fit in with Carmel Valley, instead of building some big brick building," Strachan said. "So it's low profile — it looks like a barn."

That decision cost more money and manpower, according to the pastor, but it's worth it because the building has pleased residents.

"People are excited about it," he said. "We have received letters from people in the Valley already."

Inside, the ground floor is designed with an outdoor feeling: Rooms made to look like wood-sided buildings — complete with windows and flower boxes — surround a brick walkway sporting benches, plants, and even a fountain.

The game room contains five TVs — three of which have the latest in video game technology — and ping-pong and pool tables. A "VIP Lounge" for middle-school kids features couches, bean bags, a big-screen television, games and a stereo system.

The wood-floored gym contains skylights that can be shuttered at night to reduce light pollution and special insulation in the ceiling to reduce noise.

"A neighbor can hear the baskets rattle when people are playing basketball," Strachan said. "So we'll have to do something about that."

Upstairs, a corner is home to a bandstand with a variety of musical equipment. Tables, chairs, futons, live plants, tiki torches (which will not be lit) and old surfboards are placed throughout the room, which opens onto a balcony overlooking the gym. Murals of tropical scenes viewed through windows and selected Bible verses adorn the walls.

Even the bathrooms include special finishing touches, like posters in the men's room and silk flowers in the ladies'.

"Their attention to detail has been impressive," Strachan said of his church volunteers.

The entire creation took almost six years. A committee formed to garner support for the project in 1996; the church hired Davis in 1997, broke ground in 1999 and finally obtained all necessary permits by 2000. Construction lasted about a year.

"We used contractors, but we also had a little Gideon's Army of guys," Strachan said, adding that volunteer efforts saved thousands of dollars. The church was able to raise about $900,000 in donations, he said, and is covering the remaining $400,000 on its own.

Monterey council will consider pueblo water

By PAUL MILLER

AFTER YEARS of trying, Lou Haddad is about to get his first public hearing on an unusual theory of water rights which could go a long way toward solving the Peninsula's water shortage.

"Monterey has rights to about 4,000 acre-feet because of the rights of the old Pueblo of Monterey," Haddad said. "There's talk of reducing the state cutback order by 3,000 acre-feet, and together, that would make up most of the shortage."

In 1995, the State Water Resources Control Board decided Peninsula residents had to reduce the water they take from the Carmel River by 10,730 acre-feet per year. Almost since that day, Haddad has been telling anybody who would listen about pueblo water rights. Next month, the Monterey City Council will hold a public hearing to decide whether to pursue those rights.

"The hearing will be in the first or second week of October," Monterey Mayor Dan Albert said.

When three council members voted to hold the hearing, it was Haddad's first major success in getting a local political body to take seriously his water rights theory, which goes back to the days when California was part of Mexico.

"The old pueblos had rights to the water flowing through the pueblo or nearby," he said. "And that included Monterey and its rights to the water of the Carmel River." In 1848, Mexico signed a treaty ceding California to the United States — on condition that rights of landowners under Mexican rule be protected by the U.S. Accordingly, the water rights belonging to the Pueblo of Monterey — now the City of Monterey — are still in effect, according to Haddad.

ly sensitive habitat, but how are you going to do that?" he said. "If they see the implementation side, they will get comfortable with it, and they're not going to beat us up so much on the policy side."

Carmel, and all other coastal jurisdictions in California, were required by the Coastal Act of 1976 to complete their LCPs no later than 1981. But no penalty was imposed by the legislature for not complying. Pacific Grove and Monterey have also never finished their coastal plans.

Commissioners' comments this week focused mainly on clarifying confusing language in the implementation plan and defining specific words, but residents will have the opportunity to air their concerns and ask questions during special public meeting scheduled for Wednesday, Oct. 3 in Carmel City Council Chambers at 4 p.m.

Copies of the draft of the coastal implementation plan are available for public viewing at Harrison Memorial Library and Carmel City Hall, or can be purchased from Copies by the Sea for $26.35.

County wants cutting-edge bluff repair for Fan Shell Beach

By TAMARA GRIPPI

AFTER A taste of what a world-class bluff repair project, indistinguishable from the natural coastline, can look like, the Monterey County Planning Commission doesn't want to settle for anything less.

The commissioners, who last March enthusiastically endorsed Cypress Point's plan to build sea walls that duplicate granite bluffs, voted Sept. 26 to require the Pebble Beach Company to take a similar approach to its bluff repair project.

They unanimously approved the company's request to allow emergency rip rap repairs completed two years ago along Fan Shell Beach to become permanent.

While permitting the 45-foot and 75-foot sections of grouted rip rap to stay, the commissioners voted to require the company to build a new façade that will blend in with the natural environment.

County planner Kristina Gee recommended the expensive extra step "because of the prominent contrast with the non-native rip rap."

PB Executive Vice President Mark Stilwell argued that creating an artificial façade is costly and unnecessary, since 700 feet of existing rip rap has safeguarded the bluffs for 20 years.

"It's not really a natural state to begin with," Stilwell said. "Since it was approved and installed, two to three million [tourists] and thousands of residents have been on 17 mile drive and no one has mentioned that this stands out or has complained about it."

Commissioner Carol Lacy disagreed as she examined pictures of the area. "These particular pictures show it [the rip rap] really is visible from the road."

The company handling Cypress Point's bluff repair estimated that Pebble Beach Co. would have to pay about $90,000 for work similar to what Cypress Point Club is doing, Stilwell said.

HARDY FOREST LOVERS WANTED

THE U.S. Forest Service hopes you'll want to celebrate National Public Lands Day by helping restore the Skinner Ridge Trail along the edge of the Ventana Wilderness in Los Padres National Forest. Volunteers will prune and clear vegetation and reconstruct switchbacks in an area burned during the Kirk Fire, started by lightning two years ago.

Volunteers should meet at 9 a.m. Sept. 29 at the Bottchers Gap Campground at the end of Palo Colorado Road off Highway 1.

Workers will hike approximately 2.5 miles from the campground and return in late afternoon.

Prepare for warm weather and steep terrain: Wear sturdy boots, gloves, a hat, a long-sleeved shirt and long pants, and bring a sack lunch and at least three quarts of water.

Locals continue to answer cries for help

By MARY BROWNFIELD

RESIDENTS PLAYING music, selling art — even cutting hair — continued to raise money for East Coast disaster relief efforts this week, taking part in what has become the largest fundraising effort ever seen in the United States.

Shelly Lyon's fourth graders at Tularcitos began collecting cash for the Red Cross the day after the Sept. 11 attacks, and so far the school has gathered $8,835.14, she said.

And sweetening that number is the fact that Robert Half International, to which a Tularcitos parent has ties, offered to match the school's gift, according to Lyon.

The kids have also written letters to newspapers and local businesses asking for help.

"We're thinking globally here — it's very exciting. The kids are thrilled and all these ideas are coming from them," she said.

The school will present the Red Cross with all the money raised during a ceremony Oct. 5.

Hair, hair, long beautiful hair

Heidi Licata, of Heidi's Studio in the Crossroads Shopping Village, used her skills and tapped into those of her coworkers to raise money for the Red Cross, too.

All told, the studio raised $3,400 during its Mission Cuts fundraiser Sept. 23, including donating the proceeds from 38 haircuts (priced at $45 each) and selling $1 raffle tickets for goodies donated by local merchants, according to Licata.

She said she hopes others in the industry will do the same.

"If we can put this together in four days, we can all do it," she said. "We're just fortunate to be able to do something."

They presented the check to the Red Cross this week, but more merchants have donated raffle items so Licata and her compatriots are continuing to sell raffle tickets. Overall, the Carmel Chapter of the American Red Cross has received $153,000 — including Pebble Beach Company employees' $50,000 gift — since Sept. 11, according to volunteer Christine Monteith.

"It's just wonderful — such generosity!" she said.

Upcoming opportunities

Anyone into big band and swing dancing can support the Red Cross by attending "United We Stand" in the Hyatt Regency Monterey Grand Ballroom Sunday, Sept. 30, from 7 p.m. to 11 p.m.

For a minimum $15 donation — all of which will go the the Red Cross — guests can cut a rug to the tunes of the Bo Williams Swing Machine and special guests Mike Marotta Sr., Luana Pedota, Dino Vera and Roger Eddy. Silent auction, no-host bars and an all-American menu will be available.

"Wear your patriotic colors; enjoy the evening and take a stand," encourages event sponsor Magic 63. Call 649-0969 for details.

Carmel artist Jan Valtr will sell lithographs of her acrylic painting, "Remember and Persevere," Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 6 and 7 from noon to 6 p.m. in her upstairs gallery on Lincoln between Fifth and Sixth, and will donate half the proceeds to the Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund.

Signed pieces will be offered for $50 and unsigned prints will sell for $20. Prints can also be purchased by mail (add $3 for postage and handling) to Valtr Coast Art Studio/Gallery, PO Box 3504, Carmel CA 93921. Call 626-6619 for more information.

CHARITY

Local charitable groups have been keeping a close watch on their finances in recent months as the national economy has soured. The impact of the millions of dollars being sent out of state could exacerbate an already bleak situation.

"We're all sending money to New York to help those wonderful families," Brown said. "At the same time, the money is going out of a limited pie for giving on the Peninsula."

Cynthia Peck, board chair of the United Way of Monterey County, said it's still too soon to measure the impact on the group's fundraising campaign, which kicked off last week.

"This is the time we count on the generosity of people in the community," Peck said. "We're going to know pretty quickly whether the phenomenon will have a substantial negative impact on local giving."

"I'm most concerned that people not forget that we pull people out of the rubble every day, figuratively speaking," Peck said. "Those needs don't stop because there is such a significant situation elsewhere."

And while giving is down overall, perhaps the worst loss to charities and nonprofits is when corporations, foundations and philanthropists — often their lifeblood — also cut back.

"There are many generous people who have committed philanthropic plans, but their portfolios are down," said Brown. "So maybe they can't give to 20 agencies, but maybe they can give to 10."

The Packard Foundation, which has supported numerous Monterey Peninsula groups, recently reduced the number of grants it bestows by 30 percent, said Todd Leuders, president of the Community Foundation for Monterey County.

Leuders explained that although Community Foundation has lost money in its investments, it has "no plans to reduce grant making in the foreseeable future."

(Community Foundation's portfolio is diversified through 13 mutual funds and wasn't as hard hit by the downturn as was the Packard Foundation, which is funded solely by Hewlett Packard stock, Leuders said.)

With a continuing influx of money from wills and bequests, community foundation will take in between eight and 10 million dollars this year, a slight increase over last year, according to Leuders.

Tandy Messenger, development director of Pacific Repertory Theater, said her nonprofit has been hurt by the sluggish economy, but she was upbeat about the future.

"The assets of the big donors were not as large as they were last year," she said. "But we're not going to go under because of it. We have to look at more creative ways to meet our needs," such as in-kind donations.

United Way's Peck explained the fall season is the time charities receive a huge percentage of the year's revenue. "The outpouring eastward is coming about the worst time it could for local giving."

While none of the leaders of the local charities wanted to take away money from the relief effort back east, Brown hoped generous locals could "just dig a little deeper."

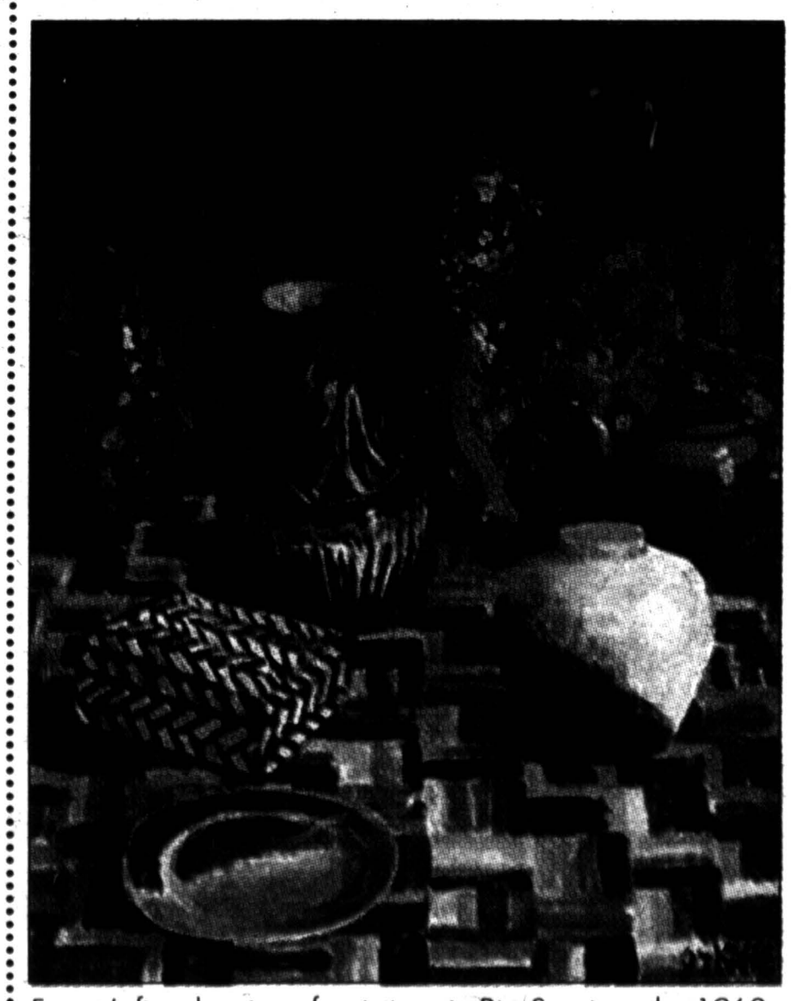
WELCOME HOME, KAFFE

INTERNATIONALLY KNOWN knitwear artist and textile designer Kaffe Fassett will sign his 11th book and attend an opening of his original art on Wednesday, Oct. 3. Fassett will sign "Passionate Patchwork" at 4 p.m at the Big Sur Arts Center. Also, Brandon Mably will sign his first book, "Brilliant Knits."

A reception and slide presentation follows at Cafe Kevah at Nepenthe in Big Sur, starting at 6:30 p.m. Tickets for the reception/slide show are $15 and can be purchased online at www.bigsurarts.org or by calling 667-1530. All proceeds benefit the Big Sur Arts Initiative, a non-profit arts education organization.



Fassett's first showing of paintings in Big Sur since the 1960s can be viewed Oct. 3 through Dec. 1 at the Big Sur Arts Center.

Kaffe Fassett, who grew up at Nepenthe, was once described as "The Mick Jagger of Knitting." He will sign his newest book during an Oct. 3 reception in Big Sur.

Scavengers raid the village of Carmel-by-the-Sea

. . . and, by the way

THE OTHER day, upon being informed that the camera store film processing machine had broken down yet again, I was struck by the pained look the counter folk had on their faces while telling me the news.

It occurred to me that far too little credit is given to the suffering of such hapless employees, who have the unpleasant task of bearing ill tidings.

Though they may tell you, "I'm just the messenger!" I doubt it makes it any easier for them.

And all because some pile of metal over which they have no control — film developing machine here, computer network there, etc. — suddenly decides it doesn't like its lot in life.

Of course, there will always be some counter person somewhere who visibly delights in a customer's misery.

But more often than not, it's the way I just experienced it: the empathy so genuine that if they could've sat on the rolls of film and hatched them into perfect prints, they would've squatted right there and then . . .

Pine Needles

By Sissi Maleki

THE EVENING of Sept. 19 saw the invasion of Carmel by squads of scavengers organized by the Carmel Business Association (CBA) and the Carmel Residents Association (CRA).

With CBA president Larry Hoover setting last minute ground rules, and CRA program chair Melanie Billig arranging silent auction items, the groups' first joint Scavenger Hunt benefiting local cultural venues, took off with laughs and good-natured threats.

Contestants gathered at the Sunset Center patio and quickly got into groups of six or so to strategize and mine each other's knowledge of the mundane — such as the name of the Carmel shop that sold Vespas . . .

Realtor Alan Cordan, one of the sponsors and original planners, hung around with wife Sandy to watch the frenetic activity.

"We had meeting after meeting with Melanie and Larry," Alan said.

After that, the core group took on Lisa Budlong, Richard Peterson, Laurel Whorf, Diane Flanders, Mary Pankonin and Alice Englander.

Alice got involved, thanks to Melanie Billig's sneakiness.

"She always starts by saying, 'Would you do me a little favor?' and it turns out to be a major event!" she said

Sue McCloud, who had plenty of homework that night, made a brief appearance, but long enough to inform the crowd: "I charge for clues and I can be reached at home by phone!"

Roberta Grisales was the first to return, but immediately got on her cell phone to trade notes with her other team members still in the field.

A cell phone? Whatever happened to sweating it out?

Sure enough, her team, which included Kurt Grasing & fiancée Christina Chin, Chris Cromwell, Gary Wiegand, Susan Dixon and Melanie Frame, later won.

Wendy Banks, Kay Prine and Connie Wright were taking it quite seriously, judging from their expressions. Maybe it was because they planned to walk and had no cell phones!

Among the adventures that night, Vikki Logan ran into a slightly inebriated individual who, upon overhearing that she and her team were searching for swizzle sticks, decided that it proved "a bunch of arrogant people live in this town!"

(As Melanie pointed out later, "running around like idiots" doesn't normally describe arrogance!)

On the other hand, one team who double-parked during the hunt, suddenly found a cop car behind them with lights flashing. It made for some tense moments 'til the cop ended up offering a tip on finding an item — "Try the Village Pub."

Other contestants included Nancy Holden, George Eckardt, Carole Champion, Wies Norberg, Barbara Livingstone, Pauline Allen, Lori Chung, Tom Williams, and Maureen & Larry Bordan

This event is NOT to be missed next year — it's a guaranteed blast!

Deen Rowe, Jennie & Roger Loper, Rick Zug and Vernell Sutherland had some time to chat at the Rotary party honoring the late Father Larry Farrell.

■ Local Rotarians honor Father Farrell

The Rotary Club of Carmel-by-the-Sea — which just sent more than $9,000 to the N.Y. relief effort — held their annual barbecue honoring the "priest of the people," the late Father Larry Farrell, on Sept. 19 at Carmel Mission.

Members like Deen Rowe, Graham Robertson, Clayton Neill, Jennie & Roger Loper and Rick Zug made the most of finger-lickin' good food donated by Joe Solis of Monte Vista Market (the place with ribs to die for!), and wine from Merv Sutton of Nielsen's.

New resident Vernell Sutherland was just being inducted into the club, after moving here from Virginia four months ago with her husband, a chief technology officer.

"This Rotary Club is great not only for meeting people, but for the great work they do," said Vernell, an attorney.

Elinor Laiolo's presence was cheered as were guests such as Russ Campbell's dad Wayne.

President Dee Adolph kept the members in stitches with her comments, complemented by Joe Solis' very entertaining impersonations of celebrities

Realtor Barbara Simmons has been making 3 a.m. runs to pick up her sweetheart, Mac Moss, a Civil Air Patrol pilot, from other airports when Monterey has been fogged in. He's been ferrying blood samples for testing, a job ordinarily handled by commercial flights.

"There's been a huge influx of blood donations and all of them have to be tested," he explained, adding that this has strained the resources of local hospitals.

Very active old-timers Bud Allen and Russ Harris were there, as were Bob Mulford and René Boskoff and others from the Monterey Club.

Annieglass CEO to speak

THE PROFESSIONAL Women's Network of the Monterey Peninsula will feature a presentation of entrepreneur and CEO of Annieglass, Ann Morhauser.

Morhauser will share how she launched and developed her Santa Cruz-based art glass business, and how she transformed from artist to CEO.

The free program begins at 6:45 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 3 in the community room of the Crossroads, Rio Road off Highway 1, Carmel. For details, call 646-0796.

A PLACE TO DINE WHERE THE ONLY SURPRISES ARE PLEASANT ONES

FEEL LIKE going out for lunch or dinner but don't want to take a chance? Have we got a restaurant for you! The Grill on Ocean Avenue is just about perfect in every respect, from menu choices to execution, from waitstaff to ambiance.

From the freshest of fish, to steaks and roasts, to vegetarian fare, The Grill offers a tempting and varied lunch and dinner menu seven days a week.

You can deep-six that advice by some Eastern restaurant critics who warn diners-out to stay home on Mondays because that's frequently a chef's day off and the kitchen is using up left-over fish from the weekend. Not so here on the Monterey Peninsula in fine restaurants where fresh fish is available daily.

On Monday, The Grill on Ocean Avenue offered catch-of-the-day seafood at both lunch and dinner, written on a chalk board in the entrance way to tempt passersby.

Once inside, host Michael Shanley makes patrons welcome, selecting seating with an eye to comfort and preference. A lone diner may be placed thoughtfully at a table looking out on the activity of Ocean Avenue or with a view of the fireplace where a welcoming fire is ablaze.

On Monday, the luncheon catch-of-the-day was California rock sole ($13.75), described by our server, Martine, as being in the petrale sole family. Firm in texture, it was prepared perfectly by executive chef Moises Robles in a lemon-caper butter sauce and served with lightly saffroned rice. Blue Lake green beans which had been blanched and then sautéed in butter with a few baby greens and chopped scallions accompanied the fish and rice. This description does not do justice to the superb preparation and execution which brought out the texture and flavors of these simple yet artfully combined elements. Each forkful could be savored and enjoyed to the fullest.

Salads are offered, too. Those that caught our eye were hearts of romaine and tomato with sliced almonds, croutons and gorgonzola vinaigrette ($6.50), the bibb lettuce salad with golden raisins, caramelized pecans and Roquefort dressing ($6.75), and an oriental oak grilled chicken salad with avocado, roasted red bell peppers, crisp wontons and sesame vinaigrette ($10.50).

Sandwiches ($8.75 - $9.50) are on the luncheon menu, including a roasted pork loin sandwich marinated with Asian five spices, flat grilled, topped with sautéed onions and bean sprouts, served on an onion roll ($9.50); Black Angus hamburger, a turkey breast and avocado club, an oak grilled chicken breast, and a vegetarian portobello mushroom (all $8.75) round out the sandwich list.

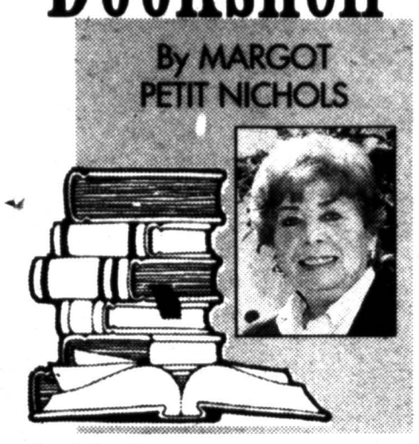
Butterflies' message: 'Positive change is possible'

The Bookshelf

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS



SOON MIGRATING monarchs will reign again in Pacific Grove, adorning trees with their orange and black fragile beauty. P.G. school children will parade in their faux butterfly wings and springform antennae to welcome the Lepidoptera on Oct. 6 — and author Maraleen Manos-Jones will lecture on her book, "The Spirit of Butterflies — Myth, Magic and Art" — at 2 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 7 at the Pacific Grove Museum of Natural History.

Manos-Jones is enamored of butterflies. She has a passion for the exquisite flutter-bys that has led her to work with the Mexican government creating butterfly sanctuaries, and she tags the little creatures in the mountains of Mexico to help researchers study migratory patterns. She even leads "Spirit of Butterfly" tours to Mexico.

This fascination began almost 30 years ago in Cape Cod, Mass. when she witnessed the metamorphosis of a caterpillar she had taken into her home. When it emerged from its chrysalis and plumped itself up into a full-size monarch, it moved onto her hand where it "feasted on honey and water."

Although the butterfly left to follow its migratory destiny a few days later, 100 more caterpillars emerged in her home, unwittingly brought into the house on the undersides of milkweed leaves picked to feed her original friend. They, too, went through transformation, filling her home with their fluttering radiance until they embarked on their own freedom flight.

An obvious symbol of renewal, transformation, death, rebirth, joy and hope, butterflies have been admired through the ages and recorded in all art forms. ". . . we need butterflies to remind us that positive change is possible, and there is magic to life. . . ," Manos-Jones says in her book which records their myths, legends, stories, poems and art from many different cultures throughout the ages.

The 144-page book, with its 175 illustrations, is published by Harry N. Abrams, New York. It is beautifully printed in full color on coated stock and retails for $34.95. It will be available at the free lecture and booksigning.

Part of the book's proceeds will go to support the Michoacan Reforestation Fund, of which Manos-Jones is the New York representative.

A two-month research trip on a mountaintop near the regal monarch hibernating grounds will be detailed in her next book currently underway — "In Search of Butterflies."

The museum, site of the lecture, is located on the corner of Forest and Central avenues in Pacific Grove. For information, call Paul or Bernie at 648-5716, ext. 12 or 10.

NORTH AMERICA'S oldest continuously published periodical, The Old Farmer's Almanac — founded in 1792 by Robert B. Thomas — is now available in its 2002 edition. There's something intriguing about this almanac that makes it a perfect companion on a vegging-out day at home and do nothing but gain a lot of eclectic knowledge on esoteric subjects. Even the ads are fun to read. Aside from the almanac's usual astronomical calculations and the farmer's calendar for every month in the year, also included are tides, holidays, eclipses, and so on. There are features on magic tricks, solar power, how to make compost, weddings — then and now, and two very intriguing articles on how to get out of doing what you don't want to do, and the best ways to avoid the worst kind of colds. The Old Farmer's Almanac sells for $4.99 and worth every penny. I wonder who that old farmer was?

CITY'S NATIONAL PLAYWRITING COMPETITION WINNER NAMED

Hypnotist brings forth John Wilkes Booth in Festival of Firsts' play premiere

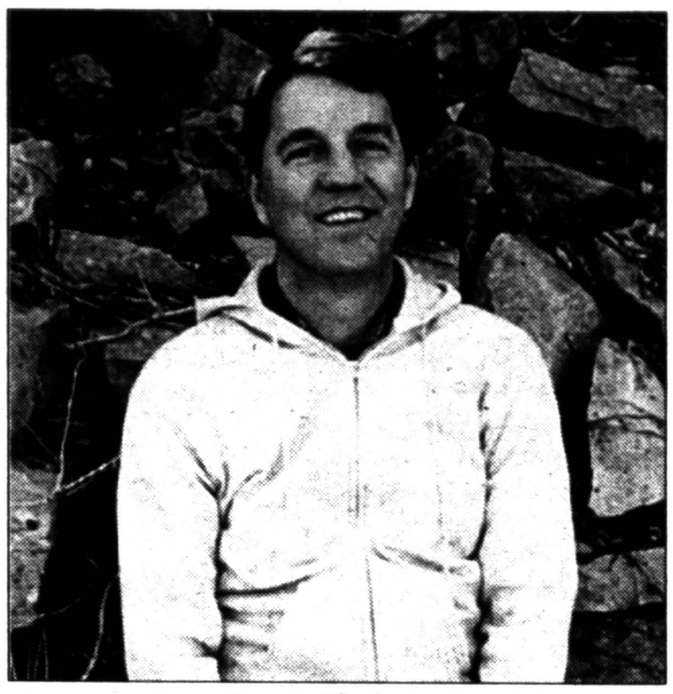
By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

HYPNOTISTS, IN bringing their subjects from a trance, will frequently say something like, "As I count backward from five, on the count of one, you will awaken, alert, refreshed and ready to resume your activities." Hence the play title, "The Count of One," written by Gary L. Blackwood, winner of the city's 22nd annual Festival of Firsts playwriting competition selected from more than 98 entries.

The festival began in 1977, created by Carmel mayor Gunnar Norberg. It offers the winning playwright not only a $1,000 prize, but the chance to see the play staged with full production values. The plays have always been performed at Sunset Center, but because of the planned renovation of the theater, will be presented this year on the stage of the Carl Cherry Center for the Arts, Fourth and Guadalupe, Carmel-by-the-Sea.

The play, premiering here next week, concerns Dian, a burned-out hypnotherapist, who evokes John Wilkes Booth from her new patient, Stuart, while he is "under." At first, she thinks the tranced-out Stuart is simply identifying with the famous assassin, but deeper into the sessions, she begins to realize she is conversing with Booth himself and she becomes privy to some startling information. This intriguing concept is said to be taken from an actual incident.

Robin McKee will direct, and the play's three characters will be performed by Virginia August, Jill Jackson and Jeremy Patterson.



Gary L. Blackwood

Winning playwright Blackwood resides in Carthage, Missouri, and has been writing since his teen years. A number of his stories have been published in "Cricket," "Wild West" and "Mother Earth News." He has published nine books for children and adults with one of them, "Wild Timothy," selected as a "Recommended for Reluctant Readers" book by the American Library Association. His stage plays have been produced in regional and university theaters.

Preview and premiere set

The premiere of "The Count of One" is set for 8 p.m., Friday, Oct. 5 at The Carl Cherry Center for the Arts, Fourth and Guadalupe, Carmel-by-the-Sea following a preview the night before. An 8 p.m. Saturday performance is set for Oct. 6. and a 2 p.m. matinee on Sunday, Oct. 7.

The following week, at three 8 p.m. performances, "The Count of One" will be performed Thursday through Saturday, Oct. 11 through 13. Tickets are $8.

An original script, "Empty Places," by Robert Houser, has been selected for a free reading only at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Oct. 10 at the Carl Cherry Center.

Cannery Row

What's happening this month in and around the Monterey Peninsula's historic waterfront

Old Courage Reborn

MONTEREY -- Cannery Row, like all of America, is struggling with a new way of dealing with almost everything. Especially travel. For decades Cannery Row has hosted a world-wide following of John Steinbeck and his bawdy tales of the old street, and travelers from all over our state and country. For vacation, for business, for golf, for our exceptional food and wine. For the experience of shopping and dining on "America's Most Famous Street."

Almost like the assumption that the sardines could not possibly be depleted, the thought is so profound that hearts so black could have affected the American and world psyche, fundamentally changing the way peoples the world over look at and consider the prospect of travel. Fortunately, Cannery Row has a history of grit and determination confronting adversity.

From its earliest canning years, Monterey struggled against subsidized world markets for its product. A recession after World War I; the entire fishing fleet dashed on Del Monte Beach, destroyed by a storm on Thanksgiving, 1919; The huge oil tank fire of 1924 that destroyed several canneries outright and threatened the Tevis-Murray Estate on our shoreline; the privations and struggles through the Great Depression; clouds of war over Europe and the unthinkable savaging of the Pacific Fleet at Pearl Harbor; the disappearance of the sardines in the early 1950s; the desperation and agonies of starting Cannery Row all over again, from scratch from the ghostly gray demise of its sardine factories in the 1960s – reborn without a dependence on the once mighty sardine.

Typical of communities all across America, Cannery Row is buckling down to weather the new threats to the world's freedom to live and travel as it wishes. Among the destinations this broad travel public can choose, Cannery Row stands among the safest, most desirable, most meaningful of travel experiences. With September 11th on its collective mind, Cannery is doing what it does best: pulling together with the rest of America to get on with business. And the business of life. And travel. Our freedoms and appreciation's seem somehow even more special considered from the shore of this great bay.

Sadness and sorrow are not new along this street, so once again Cannery Row will do what its history has instilled it with the grit to do. It will welcome its visitors with gratitude and grace. And provide all the things we are with a renewed sense of sharing our blessings of the American Dream.

prepared. Try a 16-oz. rib eye steak for $24.75, a Black Angus steak for $16.50, a filet mignon for $25.50 or a half chicken at $17.75 (only a few of the offerings).

A chef's homemade pasta is served daily, as well as duck ravioli with orange beurre blanc ($13.50 at lunch, $16.75 at dinner), and a clams linguine with oak grilled sea scallops is on the luncheon menu at $13.75.

For my dinner at The Grill that evening, I selected another catch-of-the-day — a roast halibut that had been pan-seared and then oven roasted in the very same pan and served over sautéed baby spinach and very flavorful grilled portobello mushrooms. Japanese daikon kaiwiri sprouts topped the halibut and added a crisp, fresh radish flavor. This dish could not have been better. The flavors and textures were brilliantly conceived. Hats off to exec chef Moises and his sous chef, Armando Aquino. And to our attentive and knowledgeable servers, Martine and Roland.

Ashley Edwards is the general manager and Deborah Davidson is the assistant manager.

Owners Ted Leidig and Anton Salameh know the restaurant business inside out, and it shows in oh, so many ways: from selection of staff — who truly seem to care about their patrons' dining experience — to the discriminating selection of Seaside's Palermo Bakery ciabatta bread, served warm with a crock of sweet butter, to Italy's best espresso, Ily, accompanied by a thin curl of lemon peel and cubed sugar. These are all thoughtful refinements that demonstrate management's care in offering the best to its patrons.

The Grill on Ocean Avenue deserves gold stars in every category. Try it soon.

MORE THAN YOU'D EXPECT.

Morrison's oils to be featured in CAA's Center Gallery in Oct.

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

BRENDA MORRISON, a painter of floral still lifes, landscapes and interiors, will be honored with a solo show in the Carmel Art Association's center gallery from Oct. 4 through Nov. 7.

Raised and educated in Southern England, Morrison made her permanent home here in the late '50s and became affiliated with the CAA in 1977. She has served as president of the organization several times and was on the board of directors.

Morrison, who has not had a solo show at the CAA in more than 10 years, was a former student of Carmel Highland's artist Keith Lindberg. Morrison acknowledges his influence in all aspects of her work.

Three artists and their works will be featured in the CAA's Gallery Showcase from Oct. 4 through Nov. 7 in the Segal Room: Alicia Meheen's plein air watercolor landscapes; Susan Reith's still life and figurative oils on paper and canvas; and Margaret Roberts' small scale watercolor landscapes.

The local art association is located on Dolores between Fifth and Sixth avenues and is open daily from 10 a.m to 5 p.m.

For information, call 624-6176.

WHAT'S NEW with Meg

MONARCH KNITTING & QUILTS

All of Joan's new fall yarns have arrived so there's a fresh new look everywhere you turn at MONARCH KNITTING & QUILTS. Luxurious scarves are popular to knit for a quick, inexpensive gift, so check out the new "Flash" or "Eros", which can be used singly or together for double the beauty. If sparkle is what you're after, see "Firefly"! What about an incredibly cozy sweater, which knits up fast, called "Chamonix", a light-yet-bulky yarn of merino wool with a good amount of angora? It ranges in color from dusty pastels to deep eggplant. Remember the Christmas stocking and sweater kits here, too! You can't miss!
529 Central, PG 647-9276

Prim & Proper

You'd be smart to run right over to PRIM &PROPER and take a good long look at Dea's new shipment of Blue Willi's in dark camel. You're going to love - I predict - the skirts and pants in fine corduroy, the sweaters, layering pieces and a most handsome heavy cardigan. Other Fall sweaters and pants await you - in eggplant, chocolate, and once again, dark camel. Also, stunning suede jacket by David Brooks, feather-weight cords with matching sweaters & blouses by Foxcroft. By all means, see the handknit alpaca sweaters from Peru and the boiled wool sweaters by Susan Bristol. See it all! 553 Lighthouse, PG. 372-5563

ANCIENTS

What do architectural antiques, Portuguese religious carvings, French tiles, 17th century Tuscan doors, Louis XIII fireplaces mean to you? At ANCIENTS, a new stone yard with Mediterranean building materials, "hard-core" antiques are quite the sensation, ideal for country clubs, museums, as well as large homes and country cottages. In a magnificent outdoor collection you'll see 400 year old wine vats, Italian and French terra cotta floors, antique European fireplaces, village fountains, Corinthian pillars, etc. You don't have to be a designer or architect to find that dream of yours, so go out to ANCIENTS, and I bet you'll find it!. 9700 Carmel Valley Rd (where the Farm Center used to be). 626-2656

CARMEL VACUUM AND APPLIANCE

As you probably know by now, CARMEL VACUUM AND APPLIANCES is in a new location and that it's the kind of shop it's hard to live without. The key word there is MEILE– Meile everything - vacuums, front-loading washers, dryers, cook-top ovens, etc. Repairs are made on all makes and models of vacuums,. stoves, sewing machines, etc. and parts to the appliances are available. Need knives, scissors, small garden tools sharpened? A lamp repaired? Come tell Tom your needs and you'll be well taken care of! 26135 Carmel Rancho Blvd., Carmel. 624-4018

THE MONTE VISTA MARKET
"Catering" Deli and Gourmet Specialties

Have you tried them yet? Those absolutely scrumptious bottled marinades created by none other than Joe Beef? You know, Joe, the Beef Man behind the meat counter at the MONTE VISTA MARKET!! Now he's the creator of Joe's Beef Greek Lemon marinade, marinade for fish, meat marinade and barbecue sauce. Suggest you NEVER eat ribs, chicken, beef or fish without! This overnight success is also found at the Grove market, Nielson's market and Bruno's market. And who knows when they'll go nation wide! A tasty bottle only $3.79.
15 Soledad, Monterey 372-2075.

Consignment Gallery

You never know just how lucky you'll be when you're in THE CONSIGNMENT GALLERY! There's no telling what you'll find. This shop is in two levels -18,000 square feet of quality office and home furnishings and a great deal more - upscale consignments from peninsula residents as well as new designer pieces - art, sculpture, antiques, custom beveled mirrors, etc. all at unbelievable prices! Be smart, drop by soon and by the way, if you want your collectibles to be marketed, bring them here.

Clever staging can't give a two-dimensional play staying power

By DEBORAH SHARP

IN THE ongoing controversy over what plays Shakespeare did or did not write, it's good to remember that he might have been involved in some early duds. Not that "Thomas of Woodstock," currently playing at Pacific Repertory Theatre, is an outright clunker. It embraces elements typical of Shakespeare: pairs or sets of characters that act as foils for each other, leitmotifs that echo the themes of the play, and some pretty lively comic relief. But overall, the play lacks the depth, in both characters and text, that marks Shakespeare's later work.

The play depicts the murder of Thomas of Woodstock, youngest son of Edward III, who led lordly opposition to Richard II. The part of Thomas is one of the best drawn in the play and well portrayed by Michael Sandels, who gives him the unassuming nobility the part requires. He possesses quiet strength and gentle humor.

Another well-drawn character is Richard's queen, Anne, who obviously loves her husband but is greatly distressed by his excesses. Rachel Binder gives the character true majesty. By contrast, Brian Herndon, as Richard, portrays a young, untried king, who only fleetingly shows evidence of the nobility he suddenly assumes at the end of the play.

Tim Hart, as Tresilian, Richard's sleazy lawyer friend, and Nathan Sanford, as Tresilian's side-kick, Nimble, provide first-rate comic relief although Tresilian seems almost grotesquely overdrawn. Also overdrawn is the use of clothing as symbolic of the inborn majesty of Woodstock versus the trumped-up royalty of Richard and his favorites. The contrast between the foppishly decked out king and his minions is funny compared to Woodstock's homespun attire, but somehow, one doesn't expect to laugh at villains.

THEATER REVIEW

The staging of the production provides several striking, but disconnected moments that are visually satisfying but don't add up to a cohesive whole. One such moment is the masque presented to Thomas just before he is seized. It's discordant music and violent subject are arresting but totally alien to the otherwise true-to-period staging. The amusing sequence showing the peasants' trickery in response to the king's unfair taxation and the final battle scene are well-conceived and carried out.

Perhaps the overall flatness of the play itself makes these bits of superior staging stand out unnaturally. Clever staging can't give a two-dimensional play staying power.

OPINION

Editorial

War and the environment

AS THE nation tries to cope with the staggering human cost of the attacks by terrorists on New York and Washington, environmentalists are also beginning to calculate the damage inflicted on nature by the events of Sept. 11.

Colossal smoke plumes that lasted for days. Toxic fumes that even now are emanating from the sites of destruction. Millions of gallons of runoff containing petrochemicals, asbestos, and God-knows-what. Enough concrete for a 50-mile four-lane freeway. A mountain of debris that will have to be landfilled. Not to mention all the mining, manufacturing, energy use and consumption of raw materials that will go into rebuilding the World Trade Center complex, fixing the Pentagon and replacing four large jets. Our military action against the fanatics and their supporters will also not be without its substantial environmental cost.

While mourning the dead, it is also useful to remind ourselves that, of all human activities, war is certainly the most deadly — not only to humans but also to the earth's innocent wild creatures — and that peace and prosperity are the essential underpinnings of a popular movement to protect the environment.

Ironically, a long period of peace and security also breeds contempt for the military, which is seen as unnecessary and a nuisance when no enemy is on the public's radar. Patriotism becomes an anachronism as Americans slowly lose all awareness of the heavy price paid to create and protect their freedom. That was what was happening in the United States — until two weeks ago.

Consider, for example, the Navy's plan, announced earlier this year, to use Fort Hunter Liggett to train F/A-18 pilots based at Lemoore Naval Air Station. Despite the military's best efforts to explain why pilots need a practice bombing range closer to their base than the current target in Nevada, the plan was instantly ridiculed by politicians, activists and the news media. Among these groups, there wasn't the slightest objective consideration of the military's training needs nor, for that matter, the need to have an Air Force at all.

And just two years ago, local environmental activists and their allies on the California Coastal Commission joined forces to stop the United States Marines from staging a brief series of maneuvers in Monterey Bay. The Marine's mission: to practice quick landings in an urban environment to free hostages or thwart terrorists. Why on earth would they need to do that? opponents wanted to know. Their hostility to the Marines' proposal resulted in the practice landing on Monterey Bay being canceled.

Now the public suddenly realizes that around the world, thousands of terrorists are dreaming up clever new ways to kill American civilians en masse. There can be no doubt, unless we move to defend ourselves, that the horrifying events of Sept. 11 will be just a prologue to even more gruesome invasions of U.S. soil. Support for the President, and for the military, are at all-time highs in national opinion polls.

By no means does this require the public, here in Monterey County or anywhere in the nation, to give the military carte blanche. But at least its proposals should henceforth be given serious, thoughtful consideration based on respect for a soldier's somber duty and vital mission.

Military disrupts Big Sur

Dear Editor:

Ft. Hunter Liggett as a military base in the midst of the Santa Lucia Coastal Range, and the associated over flight Military Operations Areas (MOAs) faces substantial and growing opposition by local residents.

The MOAs extend from Hearst Castle to the Monterey Peninsula and inland to the Salinas River. Within this area, F-18s or other planes or helicopters may fly to elevations as low as 200 feet above the ground. As a jet fighter bombing range, this area will be subject to an "average" of more than 50,000 loops and passes in 6-to-8-mile wide circles above both ends of Stony Valley, which is only 10 miles from the Big Sur coast.

Big Sur, Carmel, Monterey and the adjacent interior of southern Monterey County all have inestimable value as places of repose, contemplation and wilderness; this region personifies the beauty of peace and the serenity of religion. This area supports such dignified religious institutions as a major Christian Monastery (the New Camaldoli Hermitage), three Buddhist monasteries and retreat houses (including the renowned Tassajara) Christian youth camps, a major Zen center, numerous retreat houses and traditionally oriented native Californian villages and communities. There are hundreds of cultural archeological sites that are sacred to the Salinan Indians.

It is rare for an area to have such a concentration of religious institutions. Military use, with constant jet fighter flyovers, booming tanks and thundering helicopters, is not compatible. The recent near crash of two training fighters near Big Sur (flying so low they cut power lines) exemplifies why the uses proposed by the Navy and Army need to relocate to more suitable regions.

Many people living near the base understand the economic value of a vigorous and military-independent economy. Our Big Sur Sanctuary working group is composed of mostly local resident property owners, and community based nonprofits in the King City area.

President, Ventana Conservation and Land Trust Member,

Learning bitter truths

By KARYN LEIGH BARR

I AM a liar.

I realized this as gray dust and burnt papers from the World Trade Center landed on me on Sept. 11.

I lied to myself. I thought that we were safe, secure and untouchable. Like so many of my friends, I deceptively told myself that I was blessed to be part of a generation that would never see hardship and adversity on this prosperous American soil. I naively believed that I would never experience first hand the harrowing images and smells of war.

My family and friends in California warned me that New York City would be different from anything I had ever experienced (albeit for other reasons). But little did I know that this protective bubble of deception that I had diligently constructed over my 23 years would burst in minutes that Tuesday morning.

As the surreal nightmare unfolded before my disbelieving eyes, reality slapped me in the face. I felt exposed, misled and stripped bare of my innocence. I shook from the fear of knowing that everything I once understood had disappeared, and I wondered whether America ever had been or could be what I had always thought it was: invulnerable

Frozen from shock, I saw on television the maimed New York skyline scarred by hate and brutality.

I was terrified. That is when denial set in.

At first, like so many Americans, I tried to convince myself that this act of terrorism really didn't occur and that the footage of the fallen skyscrapers was just a Hollywood promo for an upcoming film.

As I walked downtown on assignment for journalism school, I clung to the hope that the orange and gray billows of smoke that blanketed lower Manhattan were illusions. When the ash and debris-ridden smoke began to obscure my vision, I pretended that the Monterey Peninsula fog had followed me 3,000 miles to New York.

I denied I was now living in a "new" New York City. I was oblivious to the thousands of men and women — survivors and onlookers — peppering the streets with their mouths gaping in awe. I refused to believe that the white ash raining from the sky was anything but a surprising September snowfall. I refused to succumb to the fear that people I knew may have perished in the attack. (I later learned that nearly 100 Georgetown University alumni are missing.)

About 10 blocks from ground zero, I untied the blindfold of denial that had shielded me from the truth. Burdened by reality, I dropped to the dust-covered ground and saw everything.

Gray fibers and cement particles from the now-collapsed Twin Towers scattered the cracked sidewalk in front of me. Ash-covered firemen wiped soot from their weary eyes as they rested, for just a moment, to collect their thoughts and prepare to reenter the darkness and devastation. Children, innocently oblivious to the meaning of the events that took place, frolicked in the deserted streets as they waited for their parents to stop crying on neighbors' shaking shoulders.

For reasons unknown at the time, I crawled around to gather nearby pieces of debris and tried to collect them in one neat, contained spot. I didn't know then that I was trying to pick up the pieces of my abruptly shattered naivete.

Sitting there with my makeshift memorial of rubble, I felt raw. And for the first time that day, I let the harsh truth envelop me.

Later that night, tears streamed down my face. As I struggled to fall asleep I was haunted.

I cried over of the lies I told. I cried for denying the truth. And I wept for others, who, like me, lost the protection of their childhood innocence during the morning hours of a breezy September day.

HANSON

During Hanson's absence, the city will make do with contract employees. But his job will be safe until Hanson returns, Meroney said.

The Hansons have lived on the Peninsula for 18 years and have two children: Keely, 13, and Travis, 10.

Annette Hanson said her husband has been able to call the family a couple times this past week.

"We were pretty well prepared that something like this could happen," she said. "He explained everything to the kids as best as he could. We take it one day at a time. You can't worry about something happening when you have no control over it."

Hanson said her husband is in good spirits and is up to the task at hand.

"He's all gung-ho," she said. "This is what he's been trained for. He's there to do a job and he'll go wherever he's needed."

Staff Sgt. Hanson has served in the National Guard reserves for three years. Earlier in his career, he spent four years serving as an airborne combat engineer for the U.S. Army at Fort Bragg.

Hanson, chosen as the top gun of his unit last year, is active with the Monterey Bay Orienteering Club and is an avid race fan. For now, Hanson is prepared to put the rest of his life on hold to serve his country.

"He's always very conscientious," Annette Hanson said. "He gives 100 percent in everything he does. There's no halfway with him."

putting yourself in harm's way, especially when something is engulfed in fire and could explode at any moment."

Their actions were so heroic they prompted CDF Captain Dan Frost, who was also at the scene of the accident, to contact the department and commend them.

"He called to make sure Sgt. Ragan would be recognized for his efforts because, 'Had he not acted with perseverance and heroic effort, in spite of being burned himself, the victim would have surely perished at the scene,'" Cassara said, quoting from a department memo.

Boyajian, suffering third-degree burns to both his legs, a broken left leg and arm, and head injuries, was taken to Community Hospital and ultimately to a Bay Area burn clinic. In spite of Ragan's rescue, the driver died from his injuries Aug. 6, according to CHP officer Tasha Jackson.

The MCPOA Medal of Valor was last awarded in 1999 — to deputy Jess Mason for his rescue of a man from a crane that had toppled over the side of Bixby Bridge.

"Saving anyone's life and being injured attempting to do that is, at the very end, above what our duty calls for," Lincoln said. "In light of what's happening in this country, we've seen so many heroes who don't wear uniforms, so this was a hard month to do this. But any of us would certainly hesitate before jumping into a burning car — and he didn't hesitate at all."

NATURAL ALTERNATIVE TO TREE SPRAYING

Soon the adult stage of the California Oak moth will be seen flying around oak trees. This is a strong indication of future consumption of foliage. A natural alternative to tree spraying is the strategic release of predatory insects. Insectaries have reported moth pest reduction of 80% or greater, worthy of consideration. For tree inspection, strategic release of predatory insects and tree health care call Peninsula Pest Management.

MADDIE WEINTRAUB, 1 year, 4 months old, is shown here at the top of the dunes, all leashed up and ready to go home – but not really. That plaintive look as she gazes seaward, speaks louder than words: "Can't we go for one more run, Dad?"

Dad Malcolm, who had just completed his daily one-hour Carmel Beach run with Maddie, thinks not. Although Dad is an inveterate runner, there are things to do, places to go. And after all, not only has Maddie had 60 minutes of jogging and sprinting at water's edge, she's gamboled playfully with her circle of beach chums, too.

So it's off to the house where Mom Judith may be preparing Maddie's favorite snack of cottage cheese and sliced white turkey meat. Then, too, perhaps Maddie's two nephews, Julian and Gabriel, will come by for a visit with their wiggly new 11-week-old puppy, Caramel, who equals a barrel of monkeys at this point. So maybe going home isn't such a bad idea, after all . . .

Maddie's acquiescence is only one of her endearing traits. She is also known for her kindness and goodness, and her gentleness with children and puppies. Her talents are many, but she is best known for her proficiency as an alarm clock: Every morning, sometime between 6:15 and 7 a.m., she'll awaken Mom and Dad with a cold nose smooch and a warm tongue lick. After all, there are beaches to run and friends to tease – and who knows what else the day may bring?

been in the Navy almost four years and often leaves for shipboard duty.

He embarked on a six-month Navy journey in July that was to take him all over the Pacific, she said, but those plans changed after Sept. 11.

"When this all started, I knew he was going over there," she said. "In so many words he told me as much, but he couldn't say where he was going or what he was doing."

Now he and his fellow crew members are at work, sailing in an undisclosed location and unable to correspond with the outside world. Normally, mother and son would be able to e-mail each other, but not so in wartime.

"I just felt an odd feeling," she said. "I have never been unable to contact my son."

Searching for a solution to her blues, an idea popped into Quayle's head: Buy a giant, bright white bed sheet, grab some red and blue pens, write "USS Princeton" across the top, and encourage as many people as possible to write whatever they wish to those on board the cruiser.

"I'm so proud of him for serving his country and I wanted to let him know that people here are behind everyone on the ship," she said.

'I'm so proud of him for serving his country and I wanted to let him know that people here are behind everyone on the ship.'

— Debra Quayle

Hundreds have stopped to sign at a table set up outside Bruno's Market at Junipero and Sixth, and Quayle said she can't thank the market's Sanchez family enough for their support. Even Herrmann Mueller's beagle brigade left their autographs.

Quayle plans to mail the sheet next week — along with other care-package goodies only a mother would send, like sunflower seeds, cookies and new socks — in hope of getting it to Joshua Quayle in time for his 23rd birthday Oct. 20.

"I just remember that at home, he always needed socks," she laughed.

Already familiar with the process for getting such items to military personnel, Quayle will declare the contents and send the gift down to the Navy base in San Diego where her son is normally stationed. Navy personnel there will get it to him on the ship.

Quayle said she hopes the sheet will mean as much to those on board the USS Princeton as it does to her, and that it might touch some of those who have not heard from their own friends and family. She signed too, of course, with the nickname her sons call her: Lil Mama.

"I've given money to the people in New York, and that's good — that makes me feel good — but I don't feel a direct contact with that. I feel a little removed from it," she said. "But doing this, with my son involved and it affecting the rest of the crew members, I feel like I'm doing something rather than nothing. And the people who signed it felt the same way — no matter how small it is, it's still significant."

City workers rush to move storm drains before winter rains

By MARY BROWNFIELD

NOT WANTING another river to surface in the center of a Carmel residence — as happened when a storm drain failed underneath the house during the 1998 rains — Carmel Public Works crews are busy rerouting storm drains in advance of winter storms.

City crews are hard at work at Santa Fe and Third, moving storm drains from beneath houses into the public right-of-way.

Work began the week of Sept. 17 and will continue through October, according to street supervisor Stu Ross. Construction is underway in the area between Guadalupe and Third, and Santa Fe between Fourth and Fifth avenues, where crews are relocating the drains from beneath homes to the road.

"The residents won't have to worry now every time it rains that a big river's going to come belching up through their living rooms," Ross said.

Moving the storm drains will also allow public works easier access for repair and maintenance since they will no longer be on private property.

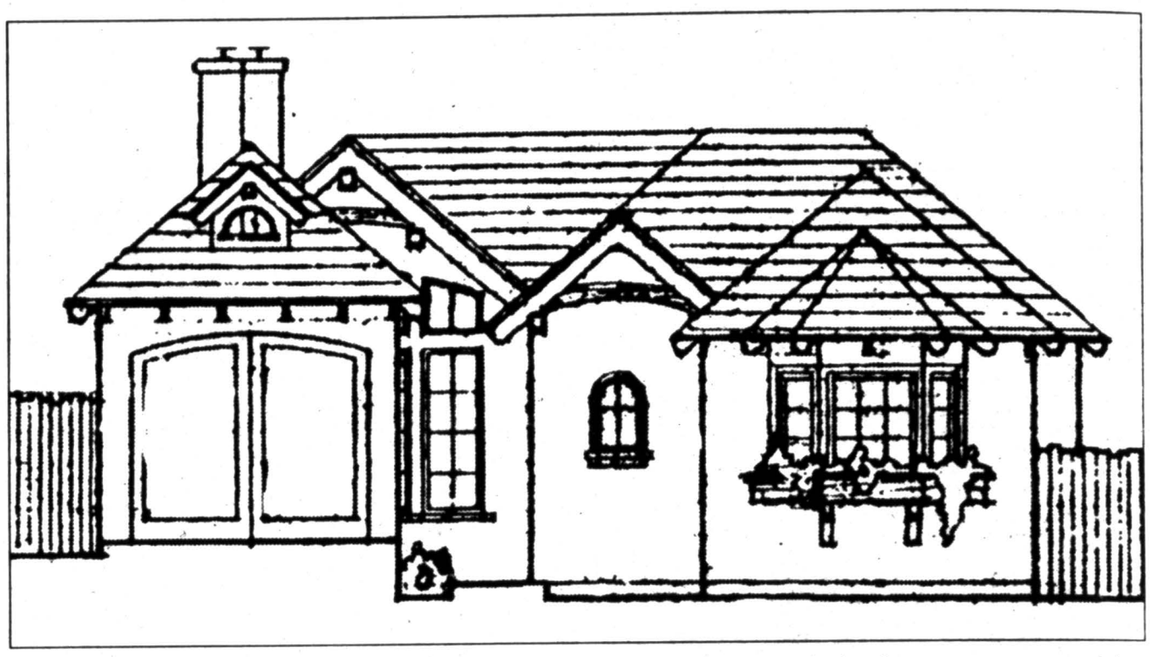
Crews will undertake similar work in the area of Monte Verde and Fourth and along the Jane Powers Walkway, according to Ross.

"Right now, the water just runs down the walkway," Ross said. "So we are putting that underground, which will eliminate water running across the street at San Antonio."

While construction is underway, affected areas will be closed to traffic daily, with detours available. Residents are assured vehicle access to their homes after 5 p.m., but may experience delays during the daytime, according to the public works department.

Ross said the work should be completed on schedule so long as there aren't storms over the next several weeks.

"The whole project is going to be pushing wintertime, but we expect to get it in and running" before the heavy rains hit, he said.



This design for a new home on Santa Rita between Second and Third wasn't accepted by the planning commission this week. Planning staff said the home has too many "planes" and too many segments of exterior walls, and recommended removal of two bay windows and a dormer. The owners want to replace a large, flat-roofed, two-story building.

City: plan for smaller house good, but not good enough

By MARY BROWNFIELD

NEDJ, LORI and Rick Kashfi plan to tear down a boxy, two-story home on Santa Rita between Second and Third and build a single-story home in its place. Great, Carmel city planners said. But the concept's still a long way from perfect, they decided.

"The proposed replacement of a very tall, out-of-scale, rambling building with a low, single-story building is strongly supported by staff," assistant planner Jaci Abadilla wrote in her report to the commission.

But the plans don't mesh with city guidelines in a few areas, she said, taking issue with the "excessive [plate] height" of 12 feet at the lowest corner of the building — "inappropriate on sites that are relatively flat," according to code — and suggesting the designer simplify the wall and roof planes.

The plate height of the existing home is 16.5 feet, according to city documents. The overall height of the existing home is 22.5 feet, while the new one would be 18 feet tall.

"The layout of the proposed home is composed of many 'boxes' that include multiple building planes or wall 'breakups' that create a busy design and only add to the complexity of the project," she wrote.

She proposed eliminating most of the breaks in the exterior walls, removing two bay windows and a dormer, and using a consistent roof pitch to simplify the project.

"Overall, the proposal has good foundation and concept," Abadilla said. She recommended the applicant bring revised plans back to the commission for further review.

Frustrated by the suggested changes, Rick Kashfi said he did not think the design — created by Draftec's Darren Davis — was too complicated.

"We are attempting to apply the rules," chair Frank Wasko explained. "I can see the resistance in your eyes because you have authorship. You have good designs, but they need to comply with Carmel's guidelines.

"We truly have one of the finest planning staffs of any planning department anywhere — they bring to the table an awful lot of knowledge — so give us the benefit of the doubt and work with us. Don't fight — it doesn't work," Wasko said.

Commissioner Bill Strid complimented the design and encouraged Kashfi to work with his designer and staff on the specifics.

"It is well sited and well fitted into the community — you received some big points for doing that," Strid told him.

"It's like you're taking my creativity completely away," Kashfi responded. He had not read Abadilla's report before commenting at the hearing.

The planning commission voted unanimously to continue consideration of the project, encouraging all parties to work together and bring back revised plans.

The existing two-story, flat-topped home on Santa Rita was to be replaced by a smaller, one-story building. But this week, planning staff said the proposed design was too complicated and the planning commission sent the designer back to the drawing board.

not need a permit to cut down a pine tree as long as their property is outside the coastal zone.

County planner Steve Maki said he saw no evidence that any oaks — which do require a permit for removal — had been removed without permission.

During the discussion Sept. 26, no one asked why the owners applied for a permit to remove 72 Monterey pines when they did not need one.

After the meeting, county planner Jeff Main told The Pine Cone the application to remove the pines was related to the original environmental review of the project.

The use permit to remove both the oaks and pines was originally granted in 1994 and was last extended in 1997. At that time Noel Mapstead filed a suit challenging the conclusions of the initial study for the project.

The suit was settled in 1998 with the added requirement that the developers would replace cut trees at a greater than one-to-one ratio. The mitigation trees have already been planted in the city of Marina.

The interior of the Hope Youth Center looks like a quaint village street. Note the faux French doors above the archway.

YOUTH

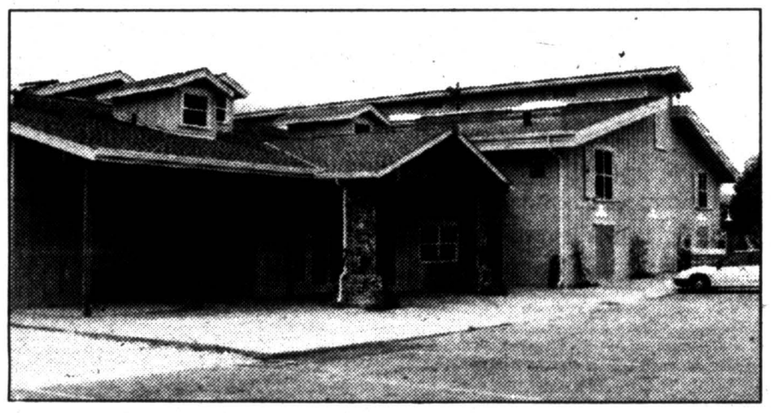
The Hope Youth Center is the domain of two youth pastors — Grant Combs and Eric Olsen. It was dedicated Sept. 16, five days after terrorist attacks in New York City and Washington, D.C. devastated the nation.

"We had to revamp our whole morning worship service to be a time of mourning and patriotism, and then to transition to the youth center," he said. "As sad as everything was in New York, it rang a clear bell that we need to provide hope for our youth."



The church has already received positive reactions on the Hope Youth Center.

Between 700 and 800 people attended the dedication, including Carmel High School and Carmel Middle School cheerleaders, teachers and staff from several local schools, regular congregation members and even elderly residents from the nearby Carmel Valley Manor, according to Strachan.

"It was wonderful to have these guys who obviously, by their trades, really believe in youth," he said, adding that part of the event included a granny-shot free-throw contest between educators like Carmel Unified School District Superintendent Marvin Biasotti and Tularcitos Elementary School principal Kim Williams.

Although the ribbon was cut last week, the center will probably not be in full use until January, Strachan said. Several groups have already requested to use the center, which can accommodate several events simultaneously.

"Its first dedication is to our church, and the second is for the community," he said. "This project is impressive because it has been funded by people who may never use it. The older people in our congregation are not going to play volleyball or video games, but they really believe in providing something positive for our youth."

Anyone interested in using the Hope Youth Center should call Lois Dew at First Baptist (624-5551) for an application, which would then be reviewed and the dates checked, according to a church official.

Some sort of use fee will be charged, but the amount has not yet been decided.

Carmel Valley: La Paloma resident reported numerous hangup phone calls at her house within the last week.

Pebble Beach: RLS student reported the theft of her laptop computer.

Carmel area: Arriba del Mundo resident reported having her house broken into by unknown person(s).

Carmel Valley: Dorris Drive resident dialed 911 to test the 911 system.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Anonymous report of a barking dog in the area of the north side of Santa Lucia between Rio and Mission. Conducted a search for the barking dog with negative results.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Second call of dogs barking at a Scenic residence south of Ocean. At 2220 hours, another officer responded and the homeowners were not home. Animal violation warning left on front gate. Responded at 0005 and heard the dogs barking. They were two small brown dogs. Owners were not home so a second notice was written on the original violation.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Management at a Junipero restaurant requested assistance with a stuck roll-up door. Officers freed the door.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Vehicle cited at Fourth and San Antonio. Driver detained due to a possible warrant. Upon further investigation this was not the wanted subject.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Assisted employees from a group home with an uncooperative juvenile at the Forest Theater. Juvenile's guardian arrived and took custody of the juvenile. They requested to be escorted out of the city should the juvenile act up again. No further problems.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of burglary and false representation at various businesses. Suspect, a Salinas resident, stopped at Dolores and Seventh and arrested.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report reviews and INS contact regarding arrest on evening watch.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: North gate at Carmel Plaza was left open. Plaza grounds checked and no problems were found. Unable to secure gate due to lock change.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Woman reported that the people who rented her Carmel residence had cut down three trees on her property. She did not see the people cut the trees but wondered if there was anything police could do. Told her she may want to contact an attorney.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of a Doberman pinscher barking and howling from inside a San Antonio residence. Dog could be heard by neighbors and from the street. It appeared to be howling because it was left alone in the residence. Contacted the owner and told her this was the second contact regarding complaints about her dog. She said she didn't know what to do about the dog barking when she is gone. Suggested she either take the dog with her or get a sitter so the dog would not be alone. Also advised her to consider getting a trainer to work with the dog. She was advised that if another complaint is received, she will be cited.

Carmel area: Female juvenile San Marcos Drive resident was transported to CHOMP on a 72-hour hold.

Carmel Valley: Suspect's car was towed by California Tow due to expired registration.

Carmel Valley: Unknown person reported a loud party on Southbank Road. The party thrower agreed to keep the noise down.

EURICH ON REAL ESTATE

Maybe paying cash isn't best

Walter Eurich

If you sell your present home after living in it for many years, you may obtain more than enough money to pay cash for your next home. But weigh your alternatives before you decide to pay cash.

You may find it's better to make a low downpayment and pay off your new house over the years. This way you'll get the benefits of leverage, which enables you to obtain appreciation on the entire value of your new house while using relatively little of your own cash.

For example, if you bought a $200,000 house with a 10% downpayment, and during the first year buyer demand and inflation increased the home's value only 3%, the property would be worth an additional $6,000 — a whopping 30% return on your cash investment. On the other hand, if you paid all cash for the home, the $6,000 in appreciation would have been a mere 3% return on your total $200,000 cash investment.

Sure, you'll have to make house payments, but the interest you pay is deductible from your taxes. And through the years, inflation — even a low rate of inflation — will make it possible to pay off the home with easier-to-obtain dollars. Furthermore, you'll have $180,000 left over after the downpayment, and you can invest it in anything you wish or use as living expenses.

If, after considering taking out a mortgage, you will at least have considered both options and made the choice that's best for you.

EURICH ON REAL ESTATE

If you sell your present home after living in it for many years, you may obtain more than enough money to pay cash for your next home. But weigh your alternatives

Maybe paying cash isn't best

before you decide to pay cash.

You may find it's better to make a low downpayment and pay off your new house over the years. That way you'll get the benefits of leverage, which enables you to obtain appreciation on the entire value of your new house while using relatively little of your own cash.

For example, if you bought a $200,000 house with a 10% downpayment, and during the first year buyer demand and inflation increased the home's value only 3%, the property would be worth an additional $6,000 — a whopping 30% return on your cash investment. On the other hand, if you paid all cash for the home, the $6,000 in appreciation would have been a mere 3% return on your total $200,000 cash investment.

Sure, you'll have to make house payments, but the interest you pay is deductible from your taxes. And through the years, inflation — even a low rate of inflation — will make it possible to pay off the home with easier-to-obtain dollars. Furthermore, you'll have $180,000 left over after the downpayment, and you can invest it in anything you wish or use as living expenses.

If you decide to go the cash route, after considering taking out a mortgage, you will at least have considered both options and made the choice that's best for you.
